Dear Honorable Judge,

As an immigrant from India, I am well aware of the effects of one business taking over an entire section of the market. While India is technically a free market economy, there is so much corruption, that many sections of the market have been monopolized. Often, it leads to one small group of men who become very wealthy, while the rest of the population cannot even afford the products. While they may claim to keep prices low, they will find loopholes and ways to inch prices up if they are allowed to remain a monopoly. I came to the United States to avoid this type of business practice. I hoped to come to a place where small businesses would not be crushed by an overbearing one. Please keep this from happening.

Sincerely,
Sujit Itty
